As the new school year begins, many parents rejoice as their children return to a structured daily schedule. However, if your child experiences difficulty processing the multitude of sensations and information during the school day, he or she may “fall apart” when they return home at the end of the day. Daily melt-downs, struggles with sitting at the dinner table, tantrums around doing homework, and appearing absolutely exhausted are just a few of the signs that your child may be experiencing difficulty processing sensory information. This informal and interactive overview will provide you with a variety of sensory-based activities and strategies to support your child in achieving a year filled with fun and learning!
